“Roman helmet” light

€695 + tax

These charming lights feature a top section made out of polished cast aluminium along with a grey enamel shade and an internal reflector fashioned out of polished steel. Their name stems from their extremely unusual shape, which is reminiscent of the helmets worn by Roman centurions. Dating back to the 1950s, only a few of these Roman helmet lights were ever made, which accounts for their rarity value. They were produced by LBL, the successor company to the legendary Kandem (Körting & Mathiesen), which collaborated with the Bauhaus. We also have this light in another type in stock with a non-enamelled shade. Just tell us what colour you require, and we can have the shade powder-coated in any RAL shade you like.

The lights come with their original socket for large E40 light bulbs up to 2,000 watts. An adapter for smaller E27 domestic bulbs is provided as well. We also sell light bulbs up to 2,000W separately in their original packing. The lights are supplied complete with a 2-metre steel chain and a 2-metre fabric cord in your choice of colour.
